Cole, Alex--Cabin--Building #131
Recommended level of Treatment: Preservation
Cost Estimate: N/A

This is a rectangular, one story building with loft. The walls are hand hewn, dovetail notched logs. The walls have been chinked with mud in the past, but most chinking is now missing.

The foundation is fieldstone piers, and loose rock.

The roof is gabled and was originally covered with hand-split, wooden shingles. The cabin is presently covered with asphalt roofing over the shingles. The roof shingles should be replaced.

Windows: There is one window. It is in the east wall of the cabin and was a four light stationary window. At present all sash and lights are missing and the window is boarded over as a security measure.

Floors: The floor is hewn puncheon. The floor shows years of wear, but some broad ax marks are still visible. Surviving puncheon floors are unique, since most cabins having them have disappeared.

Doors: There is one door. It is in the west wall of the cabin. It is built of sawn boards and has manufactured metal hinges. The cabin has been subject to vandalism so the door is boarded up for security.

Basic Interior Appearance: The interior is one room with loft. There is no stairway; a ladder was used to reach the upper portion.

The fireplace is on the north end of the room. It is built of masonry rubble, as is the chimney. Interior walls are board and batten. The ceiling of the main room is sawn board over hewn joists. The loft is unceiled.

General Location: The cabin is located about one mile east of Highway 441 and about five miles south of Gatlinburg, Tennessee. The structure is on the Old Indian Gap Road, about 100 yards west of the West Prong, Little Pigeon River.
